SECOND ANNOUNCEMENT
FOREWORD

Breast cancer in young women is a complex disease, occurring when these women are at the peak of their reproductive years, family life and careers. Being a somewhat rare disease the optimal management of these patients is based on scientific data derived from clinical trials mostly conducted on older women. Many aspects of breast cancer in young women are therefore poorly understood (e.g. etiology and biology among others) and research is much needed in this field. In addition, young women have many years ahead of them to suffer the long-term effects of treatment and specific survivorship issues (fertility and job among others). This fourth conference is a new opportunity for the latest updates on this field and a platform for generating future research concepts and collaborations. It will cover epidemiology, molecular biology, genetics, pathology, surgery, radiotherapy, systemic therapy, survivorship issues in young women with breast cancer. It will also include a Consensus Session that will form the basis for a Consensus Guidelines manuscript to be published after the Conference.

We hope that you will join us and contribute to further develop the understanding and treatment of this disease.

On behalf of the Chair and Scientific Committee Members
